'Jackie' Moss Proves Himself A Hero at The Seashore

"Jackie" Moss, 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Moss, 919 Beaver street, has earned for himself the title of "The Bristol Hero" among the residents of Beach Haven Crest, N. J., where he and his brothers, Robert and Albert are spending their summer vacation at their parents' summer residence at that resort.

A week or so ago "Jackie" saw an infant fall from the arms of its nurse while standing on the piling surrounding the bay. "Jackie" immediately plunged into the water and rescued the child. The child's head was imbedded in the mud when "Jackie" recovered it. After washing the mud from its face, he handed the child over to its guardian, with the remark she had better get some dry clothes on it quick. The infant was little the worse for its immersion.

The following day "Jackie" again played the role of a modest young hero. An eight-year-old boy got into difficulties in the same vicinity, but in much deeper water. "Jackie" went to the boy's rescue and eventually succeeded in bringing him safely to shore. For this rescue "Jackie" was rewarded by the boy's father, and received the congratulations of all the residents of the section.

"Jackie" has entered the 50-yard obstacle swimming race to be held at Brant Beach on Friday, and his many friends in Beach Haven Crest are going to attend the affair and boost their "Bristol Hero" to victory.

MAY TAKE COURT ACTION

Washington, D. C., Aug. 23.—The administration carefully watched the effect of the first publication of operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with a view to possible court action to prevent further publicity if the effect is regarded as "bad for business."

Alone of those having to deal with the monthly reports, South Trimble, clerk of the House, insisted on making the first report public yesterday. At the same time he issued a defense of his position declaring his interpretation of the law compelled his action. Edw. Thayer, Secretary of the Senate, to whom the reports likewise go, early announced he would keep the reports confidential until the Senate meets in December.

$12,000,000 SOON READY, DIRECT RELIEF WORK

To Be Administered by Newly Created State Relief Board

OTHER ACTS NOTED

By Sydney H. Eiges

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

HARRISBURG, Aug. 23.—(INS)—Within a few weeks the $12,000,000 fund provided by the special legislative session will become available for direct or work relief of the indigent unemployed and their dependents in Pennsylvania.

The huge fund will be administered by the newly-created state relief board comprised of Gov. Gifford Pinchot, Lieut. Gov. E. C. Shannon, Speaker C. J. Goodnow, of the House of Representatives, State Treasurer Gen. Edward Martin, and Auditor General Charles W. Waters.

To the funds advanced by the State may yet be added Federal money if Governor Pinchot's request for a $10,000,000 advance on the $45,000,000 loan originally asked of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is granted.

The major accomplishment of the special session was passage of the Hagmar one per cent general sales tax bill which is expected to produce the $12,000,000 to be distributed under provisions of its companion measure, the 1932 Talbot Act. Nine of the fourteen points comprising the pre-session harmony program agreed upon by Gov. Pinchot and legislative leaders finally survived the grueling eight-week session.

Eventually to overshadow the Hagmar-Talbot measures in importance, according to some legislators, is the $13,644,476 economy program. Both General Martin and Speaker Goodnow heaped voluntary praise upon the legislature for this accomplishment. Legislators in both houses regard this slash, termed a "drop in the bucket" by General Martin, as the opening wedge for an extensive budget-paring operation slated for the regular session in 1933.

Approximately $6,400,000 of the savings effected by the economy bill will be utilized to restore abated appropriations to state-aided hospitals, homes and schools and mothers' as-

SELLERSVILLE WOMAN SEEKING LOST SISTER

Jane McNichol Disappeared 46 Years Ago at Age of 16 Years

CAUSED MOTHER TO DIE

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 23.—Jane McNichol parted from her mother, sister and brother in this city, 46 years ago, never to be heard from by them or other relatives, and her sister, Susan, who lives at Landscape View, Sellersville, has requested Lieutenant Schwar, of the local police department's Bureau of Missing Persons, to institute inquiry for her.

Notwithstanding the protracted period that has intervened, the sister in Sellersville is seemingly hopeful that her absent kin will be located, or tidings of her obtained. The disappearance of the young woman was as mystifying as it has remained throughout the years she has been away, repeated previous efforts to trace her having been in vain.

The opinion has prevailed among the family that Miss McNichol, who is described as having been exceptionally attractive, yielded to allurements and was persuaded to go to another city, but this is merely a matter of conjecture, for she may have stayed here, even though she was not again seen by others of the family.

With her mother, sister and brother, the latter two of whom are younger than she, Miss McNichol came to this country in June, 1886, from England, and a few days after their arrival they went to St. Clair, Pa., where an aunt of the woman, Mrs. John Hughes, resided.

It was their intention to stay in the coal region, but a few months later they decided to come to Philadelphia, renting rooms at the home of a Mrs. Margaret Reilly, in the vicinity of Perth and Poplar streets. Within a week the mother and two daughters secured employment. Jane McNichol being engaged as a child's nurse by a family on Jefferson street.

During the first month the young woman, then 16, called upon her mother and sister and brother regularly each week, but, unexpectedly, her visits ceased. Becoming alarmed the younger sister, whose Christian name is Susan, went to the Jefferson street house to see her kin and was informed that Jane had vanished without giving any intimation where she expected to go. Inquiry was continued by the distracted sister and parent, but it proved unavailing, and after the lapse of so many years Miss Susan McNichol concluded the other day to ask Lieutenant Schwar to utilize his resources to find her missing sister, or learn what, if anything, happened to her.

As a result of the young woman's disappearance and inability to establish her whereabouts, her mother grieved so much that she died from a broken heart. Miss McNichol's brother now resides at 735 Hornung street, Pottsville, Pa., while she also has a sister in Paisley, Scotland.

Arrests in "Pigeon" Case Now Involve Four People

HULMEVILLE, Aug. 23.—Charges and counter-charges were hurled at various individuals involved when the Pacenki and Orzel families of Bensalem Township met at the office of Justice of the Peace Harry Welsh, here last evening for the second hearing in an assault and battery case.

The original arrest, that of Stanley Orzel, upon charges preferred by Anthony Pacenki was augmented by three additional arrests, last night.

Those arrested were: Anthony Pacenki; his wife, Eleanor; and their son, Walter. Charges of assault and battery were made by Orzel.

Orzel, who at Sunday night's hearing had been released under $500 bail for the further hearing, is now out on bail until the September term of criminal court. When he preferred charges against the three Pacenkis last night the two men were released under $500 bail each, while Mrs. Pacenki was released upon her own recognizance.

The affair was the result, it is stated, of the shooting Saturday of one of Orzel's pigeons by Stanley Pacenki, 17, son of Anthony Pacenki. It was later alleged that Mr. and Mrs. Orzel and two of their children went across the roadway to the home of the Pacenkis and proceeded to "beat up" Mr. Pacenki. The arrest of Orzel followed, with the hearing occurring at 11.30 Saturday night at Welsh's office, here. At Orzel's second hearing last night the charges against the Pacenkis were preferred. John DuBois, Doylestown, is representing the latter three.

Two Girls Injured On Highway at Oxford Valley

OXFORD VALLEY, Aug. 23.—Two Philadelphia girls were injured Sunday afternoon in an odd accident on the Lincoln Highway, near here. The victims, Rose Ferilli, 20 years old, 3012 North 25th street, Philadelphia, and Amelia Standard, 17 years old, of 1014 North 25th street, Philadelphia, were rushed to St. Francis Hospital, where Miss Ferilli was found to be suffering a slight concussion of the brain and Miss Standard a bruised forehead. Both are being held for observation.

The accident, which involved two other cars and a motor truck, occurred when a tire on a machine driven by Vincent Pasqualelli, 452 East High street, Philadelphia, burst, shooting the vehicle across the roadway against a machine driven by William Pollard, of 62 Montague street, Brooklyn. Pasqualelli's car was overturned. Willard Brewington, Salisbury, Md., driving a truck in the rear of Pollard's machine saw the crash and put on his brakes. A car behind Brewington's truck, driven by John H. Conway, 88 years old, Eleventh avenue, Newark, crashed into the suddenly halted truck. The two girls, the only victims of the accident, were riding with Pasqualelli.

CADETS PARADE HERE WITH STATE TROPHIES

Legion Group Returns From Pittsburgh With State Honors

TENDERED A RECEPTION

Proudly carrying a huge streamer banner "American Legion Cadets, Pennsylvania State Bagle Champions of 1932," along with the silver cup awarded to them at the recent state convention at Pittsburgh, the American Legion Cadets of Bracken Post, paraded through the streets here last night to the applause of the populace.

The Cadets returned from Pittsburgh yesterday afternoon at four o'clock and brought back with them the honors of being state champions.

Following the parade last evening they were given a cordial reception in the Legion Home.

It was announced at the reception last evening that I. Johnson Hetherington offers a set of drum sticks for the member of the drum section writing the best story of the Pittsburgh trip and a bugle to the member of the bugle section writing the best story.

The president of the Rotary Club and the president of the Exchange Club will be invited to act as the judges.

The Cadets will now carry the handsome silk championship banner with them whenever they parade, hereafter.

In the opinion of Harry Burbank, leader of the Cadets, "it is harder to keep the championship than it is to win it."

Burbank told the boys they have to be on "their toes" every minute from now on.

Next year the Cadet Corps will open the state convention on the third day.

ONE BOY KILLED, TWO INJURED, NEAR HERE, WITHIN TWO HOURS; DEAD LAD IS JOHN SWEENEY, AGED 13, CROYDON

One Fatally Hurt, with Cousin, Joseph Bradley, of Germantown, Said to Have Walked Into Path of Auto After Receiving a "Lift"

One boy, 13, was killed and two others injured last evening when they were struck by automobiles, two on the Bristol Pike and one on State Road, Croydon.

The dead:

John Sweeney, Jr., 13, Bristol Pike, nr. Croydon station.

The injured:

Joseph Bradley, 12, 2161 Furley street, Germantown.

Lacerations and bruises about the head, face and chin.

Harold Waite, 6, State Road and Elm avenue, Croydon.

Lacerations and contused wounds of the forehead, nose, right knee and back of head. Fracture of left leg.

The accident in which Sweeney was killed occurred at about five o'clock on the Bristol Pike, almost directly in front of the boy's home. Sweeney and his cousin, Joseph Bradley, were returning from the store at Croydon where they had gone to purchase an evening paper and some sugar.

The two boys "thumbed" a ride from Croydon to the Sweeney home and the motorist giving the boys a "lift" stopped his automobile almost directly in front of the Sweeney home. The two lads got out of the car on the right hand side of Bristol Pike and passing in back of the car they had just gotten out of, walked directly into the path of a machine operated by Milton Thomas, 708 Begrade street, Philadelphia. Thomas was driving toward Philadelphia, and in an effort to prevent striking the lads, swerved his machine over into the trolley tracks and just missed crashing into a pole. He was accompanied by his wife, baby and other relatives.

Thomas leaped from his own car and aided in picking up the two boys who were placed in the sedan of Joseph O'Donnell, Beaver street, who along with his brother, Frank, were driving up the highway back of the car which had stopped to discharge the two boys. The injured lads were brought to the Harriman Hospital, where Sweeney died shortly after being admitted.

The driver of the machine who had given Sweeney and Bradley a "lift" drove off and it is not known whether or not he knew of the accident. An effort is being made to ascertain his identity.

Sweeney's left leg and arm were broken. His skull was fractured and it is believed his neck was broken.

Daniel Dewsnap, Harriman Park, was a witness to the accident as were Mrs. Milton Thomas, wife of the driver of the machine which struck the two boys, and Catherine Lindine, 1589 E. Houston street, Philadelphia, an aunt of Mrs. Thomas, who was riding in the Thomas car.

Thomas is an automobile mechanic and had been at the Morrisville plant of the Warner Sand Company where he had gone to make some repairs to cars of employees there.

Thomas was detained by Bristol police until the arrival of County Detective Anthony Russo, who turned the prisoner over to State Highway Patrolman Patterson. Patterson took the prisoner before Justice of Peace Edward Lynn, who held him in $2,000 bail to await the action of the coroner.

Bradley, a cousin of the dead lad, had been visiting at the Sweeney home for the past week. The Sweeney family moved to this locality from Philadelphia in June.

The Sweeney boy is survived by his parents, two sisters and a brother.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Sweeney were working in the rear of their yard when the accident occurred and did not know of it until later when they rushed to the hospital. Both were prostrated.

Thomas said he did not have the slightest chance to avoid the boys as they rushed out directly in front of his car from in back of the one from which they had just alighted.

The second accident occurred at about seven o'clock when little Harold Waite, 6, State Road and Elm avenue, Croydon, was struck by a machine operated by Margaret Black, Pennsylvania and Washington avenues, Bristol Township.

According to Patrolman Patterson, who investigated, Waite and other children were playing in the street.

The Waite boy has a fractured left leg and numerous contused lacerations.

The youngster is at the Harriman Hospital.

PROSPERITY RETURNING

There are pessimists, malcontents, troublemakers, who believe that a panic exists or impends and who do not desire to think otherwise. Their poor distorted minds seem to derive some pleasure out of those visions of ruin and suffering, although it is difficult to see in what way they personally will benefit even though hard times discredit those of other political and social beliefs.

Fortunately for the future prosperity and happiness of the nation the great body of Americans are optimistic economically, politically and socially. They constantly see before them better times, better things. That is the mood in which one now finds them.

The United States is renewing its natural progress toward greater prosperity, greater production, greater comfort and better living conditions for the average man. The signs of vigor and confidence are as unmistakable as the signs of spring. The winter of discontent is over.

It is not surprising to see the country turning away from its recent troubles and rapidly regaining its habitual stride of prosperity.

All other public questions are subordinate to the supreme question of keeping the American people profitably employed. If the United States is busy and productive, no obstacle is too great for it to remove or surmount.

NO CAUSE FOR WORRY

Those apprehensive souls who live in fear of the end of things should find reassurance in the testimony of an astronomer that the universe is still a long way from disintegration, supposing that it is headed for such an ignominious finish.

Basing his estimate on the measurable radiation from the fiery suns and on the scientific experience that everything that burns must finally burn out, he calculates that in the stars, the last spark of heat and energy, won't flicker out for another thousand million million years.

Even on the hypotheses that everything that burns will in time burn itself out and that light and heat are essential to human life, there is apparently nothing to worry about for the present, if the astronomer has worked his arithmetic right.

But do not astronomers presume a little too much in applying mundane laws to cosmic behavior? Whatever process created these solar systems may conceivably be in operation today to maintain them or renew them. The origin of the universe is still far beyond the understanding of science; its maintenance may be another such mystery.

In any case, the date of dissolution is now postponed to a time where it need cause this generation no worry.

TRICKS of MAGIC EXPLAINED by Will L. Lindhorst

PAPER PLACED OVER BOARD DEFIES ATTEMPT TO MOVE IT WITH BLOW

Take a small board or a shingle about two feet long, eight inches wide, and one-fourth inch thick, lay it on a table with a fraction more than half extending over the edge, so that the slightest touch will cause it to fall to the floor, and spread a few pages of a newspaper over the half of the board that remains on the table. With a hardwood stick or iron poker strike the portion of the board that extends over the edge of the table and you will find the blow will not make the board fall nor raise the newspaper. This is explained by the compression of air beneath the newspaper, which makes the paper adhere to the table and in doing so prevents the board from rising.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SEVEN

COLT'S hand was on the door-knob, as he paused, thought for a moment and framed his next questions with meticulous care.

"Miss Lox, do you remember when you, Lola, and Mrs. Carewe were in this room last night—laughing!"

"Oh, yes, Mr. Colt."

"What were you laughing about?"

"Just at my chatter. I was telling them some of the experiences I have had while Mrs. Carewe helped her to undress. I was trying to cheer up Lola."

"Did Lola ask for the bathrobe herself? Think carefully now."

"Yes, she did."

"Did you get it for her?"

"Yes—out of that closet over there."

"And did you button it on her?"

"Her mother did—Lola's hands were trembling so that she could not do much for herself!"

Colt's grip tightened on the knob—and yet he lingered. He seemed reluctant to go; his mind seemed groping for more facts.

"Was there any conversation about that bathrobe?"

Dorothy Lox, who had been rubbing Mrs. Carewe's temples with witch-hazel, looked up at Colt with a puzzled air.

"I seem to remember that there was. Now—what could it have been? It was something about the bathrobe being an old one. Mr. Rowland had called here early last night and seen Lola in it. And he had offered to buy it from her. All this was before they even left the house. Lola laughed about how much fun they had over it. He offered to buy her a new one if she would give him that one. And she refused. It seemed it was an old argument between them. Lola had some reason of her own for holding on to that old bathrobe. I gathered it was a present from some admirer—over in Paris, long ago. Anyway, Vincent Rowland did seize the bathrobe and hide it—and Lola refused to leave with him until it was found again. I think, Mr. Colt, that was all there was about the bathrobe."

"I think," returned Thatcher Colt, "that is quite enough. Report here for duty at seven tonight—and thanks!"

Mrs. Carewe had fallen again into a deep slumber. Colt exchanged a few words with Flynn, who was leaving for Headquarters and then he took their departure.

District Attorney Merle K. Dougherty was awaiting him impatiently in the tip of the needle of the Chrysler Building. There, in the rooms of the Cloud Club, he had made our luncheon rendezvous. To me, the Cloud Club quarters are among the supreme disappointments of present New York life. Here is a retreat in the sky, a place where one may dine and loaf among the clouds. From the club windows one might glimpse the most romantic spectacles of the great American metropolis—if one were permitted. But no—there is a registration desk in front of the very best window, and other obstacles apparently wherever it was possible

And instead of the peace and quiet of the vault of heaven through which the Chrysler needle is pierced, the place resounds with the endless clucking derry-down of stock market tickers. Thus the Cloud Club is one of a piece with so much of modern New York ineptitude in the face of charming opportunities. But Dougherty belonged to the Cloud Club and he had insisted that we meet in these sad-yet-might-have-been-glorious chambers in the air.

True to his promise, Colt had seen to it that bulletins of all our developments had been sent to the District Attorney's office. Hence it was something of a chastened Dougherty who led us to a round table in a private room. Since we had parted from him, after breakfast, Dougherty had been to the barber. His red curls were trimmed; he was wearing a fresh suit, his nails glistened, and his sagging jowls were smooth and powdered. But the great, infant blue eyes were troubled and disappointed. Dougherty knew that the case was by no means as simple as he had believed; it was a grave and ghastly problem, that seemed every moment to become more perplexingly entangled.

"The case against Vincent Rowland seems to be more convincing at every turn," he commented, after Colt had told him of our recent visit to the apartment. "It seems to me our next step is to face him with what we've got."

But to this Thatcher Colt demurred.

"I am not at all sure that is our wisest course," he objected. "I know

SYNOPSIS

Lola Carewe, "The Night Club Lady", and her guest, Christine Quires, are mysteriously murdered in the former's apartment. Scorpions were the instruments of death. The police suspect Guy Everett, the last person to see Christine alive. Lola had blackmailed Everett. He, however, claims that Christine discovered a plot to kill Lola and feared for her own life because of her knowledge. Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt learns that a young Paris bank clerk, named Basil Boucher, loved Lola. After robbing a bank to buy her a ruby, Basil disappeared. His parents sold medical laboratory specimens. Mrs. Carewe, Lola's mother, became hysterical at the mention of Basil, calling her daughter a beast and saying Lola never loved him. Edgar Quires, Christine's brother, left his Rochester home for New York following the receipt of a telegram the day of the murders. Christine was to have inherited wealth shortly. Suspicion also points to Dr. Hugh Baldwin when it is disclosed that he purchased scorpions. He had stated heart failure caused the deaths. Colt, calling to question Baldwin, finds him dead—from a scorpion bite! Mrs. Baldwin reveals that she knew her husband was involved with Lola. Detectives report Baldwin met a man who gave him a box. In Baldwin's desk the Commissioner finds a statement in which the doctor explains he accidentally poisoned Gaylord Gifford Lola's husband. Lola's knowledge of this placed Baldwin in her power. She forced him to supply narcotics which she used to victimize her friends and later blackmailed them. Then she ordered him to obtain a scorpion to commit a murder. Baldwin learned that Vincent Rowland, the lawyer, was behind Lola's blackmailing and realized his knowledge of their activities marked the doctor for death. Lola warned Baldwin that if she should summon him hurriedly to treat a sick person, he should look for a bite on the arm and insert his hypodermic needle into the puncture. When the call came, Baldwin was stunned to find Lola the victim. In self defense he obliterated all trace of the bite as Lola had suggested. Realizing he would be exposed, Baldwin secured another scorpion and committed suicide.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX

"WONDER" he mused aloud, "if Multooler found where Christine received the death sting?"

"He ought to be here any minute now. By the way, chief—shall I get Vincent Rowland for you?"

Thatcher Colt flashed me a baffling glance of his great dark eyes. I could not understand why Baldwin's accusations against Rowland had failed greatly to excite the chief. Very calmly, he emptied the dottle from his pipe into an old-fashioned druggist's mortar that served as an ash-tray on Baldwin's desk.

"Fortunately," he replied, "we have had Rowland shadowed. His movements from the time he left the pent-house until this moment are unquestionably a matter of police observation. It is possible to conceive that Rowland struck at Lola. But how could he have killed Christine?"

And, after a moment's pause, Colt added:

"If Vincent Rowland is guilty of these murders—and it is perfectly possible that he is—then he is using some device, or some confederate that we have not as yet discovered."

Further discussion was cut short by the arrival of Doctor Multooler. The round face of the Assistant Medical Examiner was pale and peaked, and the rims of his bright blue eyes were like scarlet hoops. All night he had labored in his gruesome work upon the bodies of Lola and Christine. Now, without rest, he must get to work upon the third victim.

With a tart glance at the prostrate figure of his dead confere, Doctor Multooler knelt beside him and made a hasty examination.

"Bitten by the same bug—and right in the neck," was the Medical Examiner's terse comment. "No doubt of the symptoms by this time. I could spot them from here to Welfare Island. And no doubt of my certificate—plain case of suicide. But I guess you better ship him down to Bellevue and let me do a complete job."

"Exactly!" concurred Thatcher Colt. "Meanwhile, I have done as much as possible here. Tony, notify Flynn to send for the body. Meanwhile, I want to ask a few questions of that young lady outside."

While the Commissioner was engaged in earnest conversation with Doctor Baldwin's secretary, I reached Flynn, who remained in the pent-house. Flynn then informed me that for the first time there were stirrings of life in the apartment. Mrs. Carewe was awake, and sitting up to eat her breakfast in bed. The food had been cooked in a nearby restaurant and brought in by one of the detectives. Eunice the maid was still asleep. Chung was busy cleaning up. The butler was wearing a blue robe this morning, even more magnificent than the one he had displayed the night before. Dorothy Lox was still with Mrs. Carewe, but was about to be relieved by a successor arriving from Headquarters.

All of this I dutifully reported to Thatcher Colt. His dark eyes were clouded with thought; they seemed more melancholy than ever. But when I told him about Dorothy Lox, I saw his eyes flash with new interest.

"I must talk with her," he said. "I was afraid she would be gone. Let's go right upstairs. We have that luncheon date with Dougherty, but I must see our girl detective first."

Flynn, one eye closed, but the other twinkling with lightning, received us in the living-room, the doors of which were all guarded with patrolmen in uniform. In low tones, Colt told Flynn of Baldwin's letter. The old policeman crossed himself.

"Now," concluded Colt, "I would like to have a talk with Miss Lox."

Presently the stout and motherly spinster detective who has figured in so many of our sensational cases came out of the bedroom of old Mrs. Carewe. After her long vigil she looked peaked and drawn. But she greeted Colt crisply and cheerfully.

"Very little to report, Mr. Colt, except that old Mrs. Carewe spent a very restless night. She talked in her sleep."

"Say something important?"

"I made a stenographic record of all that she said. Would you like to have me read it to you?"

"By all means."

From the pocket of her jacket the girl drew out a memorandum book, about half the size of a stenographer's ordinary notebook. From this she began to read one of the strangest records to which I have ever listened, repeating over and over:

"That beast! That dirty beast! Ah, yes! I know who it is. Basil! Basil! Basil! Be careful, Basil!"

Here Dorothy paused to explain that these same words were repeated, for hours at a time. Then came a lull when the old woman sank into a slumber so profound that she said nothing at all.

"But about six o'clock this morning," Dorothy hastened on, "she began to talk again. She seemed half awake and half asleep. This is what she said:

"I am going to tell on Mr. Rowland. What do I care if he tries to harm me. No one can harm me. Rowland thinks I don't know. I'll tell Mr. Colt—I'll tell him about Rowland—I am not afraid!"

Here Dorothy Lox paused.

"Anything else?" prodded Colt.

"That was all," answered Dorothy. "I think," said Colt, "I had better talk to Mrs. Carewe."

But why would he not send directly for Vincent Rowland?

The haunted look still glimmered in the old woman's eyes. We stood by her bed, and she looked up at us through the wisps of her gray hair, as she chewed pitifully upon a crusty remnant of browned toast. Her breakfast tray was across her blanketed old shanks.

"Good morning, Mr. Colt," she greeted. "Have you found out who did it?"

The Commissioner shook his head, as he drew up a chair by the side of her bed.

"I'm afraid I'll need your help to do that," he countered.

The old woman darted at him a gleam of undisguised suspicion.

"If I can help you, I don't feel as if I will ever be able to get out of this bed again—but I'll have to do that, for the funeral. I don't believe I'll ever live through that."

She began to cry.

"Mrs. Carewe," began Colt hastily—even after years of police work he has never been able to endure passively the tears of a woman—"I shall have to put to you again what I asked you so solemnly last night—do you know of any person who would have a good reason for wishing your daughter dead?"

The old woman dried her eyes with a lace handkerchief, and then shook her head vigorously.

"No one, Mr. Colt. Everybody liked Lola."

She shot a glance at Thatcher Colt as if to gauge the effect of her reply.

"You did not know of any person with whom she had quarreled violently?"

Again that vigorous shake of the head and an equally vigorous denial.

"We went over all that last night," she added querulously. "I'm not up to much this morning, Mr. Colt."

But the Commissioner was not to be put off.

"Do you remember two little boxes that your daughter had in her possession during the last few weeks?"

"Boxes? What kind of boxes?"

"A little larger, I should say, than a pack of cards. Much thicker than that. Probably of unpainted wood. Ever see anything like that?"

"No. I don't remember anything like that. What would she keep in them?"

"Something alive!"

stance funds. The remainder will be used to balance the state budget. Governor Pinchot vetoed a bill giving another $2,000,000 to state-aided hospitals because of lack of funds.

The legislature authorized political subdivisions in the state to negotiate temporary loans on delinquent taxes. It empowered Philadelphia and Pittsburgh to levy taxes of their own for unemployment relief.

A constitutional amendment, authorizing a $25,000,000 state loan to reimburse counties, cities and poor districts for funds spent for relief was initiated and made ready for submission to the electorate. The legislature at the special session also expanded the powers of the state Secretary of Banking to sell, lease or borrow on real and personal property of closed banks to effect rapid liquidation and paved the way for him to negotiate loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The extraordinary session also approved a constitutional amendment permitting the state to borrow money from the R. F. C. and authorized a $25,000,000 loan to meet government expenses during the next biennium. It further authorized building and loan associations to borrow from the R. F. C. Measures passed by the assembly abated some of the penalties for delinquent tax payments.

The keystone of the State's relief program, the sales tax bill, was not included in the harmony legislative program, devised at a moment when the Governor, General Martin and legislative leaders formed a solid bloc against any additional proposed taxation. They later retreated from this stand when the House of Representatives was forced into a position where it faced adoption of the sales tax or failure. The Senate, with the same threats in view, seconded the bill.

One intangible result of the special session, which legislators prophesied will make itself manifest at the regular session next year, was the crystallization of legislative demand for an independent governmental unit on budget affairs. Legislators were swamped with a mass of contradictory figures during the special session when they called for departmental statistics. The Revenue Department, the many department heads, the Governor, and the budget secretary presented their own sets of varying figures.

Governor Pinchot vetoed a bill for creation of such a bureau at the last session. Legislative leaders said the bill will be reintroduced next year and a determined fight made to pass it, even over a veto.

"Aggie" Robinson handled herself well behind the plate for the winners.

SUBURBAN TEAMS SHOW "STUFF" ON DIAMOND

Bensalem went down before the pitching of Bob Patterson on their own diamond, Sunday afternoon. Featured in the game was an unassisted double play by Craig Dilks, snappy third baseman and relief pitcher for Bensalem. Nick Muniz, third baseman for Eddington A. C. got hold of a high one and slammed it far and wide for a homer.

Eddington played heady baseball all through the game and held the runners close to the bags throughout the contest. E. Dilks started for Bensalem and lasted seven innings when he gave up by mutual consent to allow his brother C. Dilks to carry out the rest of the game. Patterson pitched nice ball and struck 16 of the Bensalemites out.
Score result was 11-2.

Eddington lost by the score of 13 to Sunday, Andalusia proved too strong at bat for the locals. Errors on the part of the infielders of the local nine cost them plenty and the opposing pitcher had them under control at all times during the game.

Robinson's home run was a feature of the contest. S. Creely started the mound work for Eddington and gave way to Lewis in the fourth inning. Cox on the mound for Andalusia was hard to solve and lasted the entire game with plenty in reserve at the finish.

Eddington A. A. is scheduled to play the Bensalem Aces on Thursday evening and probably Oakford A. C. on Sunday.

FERGUSONVILLE, Aug. 23.—Fergusonville baseball team had a fast week, Tuesday evening it defeated men's club of West Bristol by score of 6 to 0. This is the first season Mellor pitched in these parts, having won 12 games and lost 1. On Sunday the locals defeated Bristol Park, 11-10 in one of the fastest-moving games of the season. Jean Gerhart pitched and fielded a good game; James Wolfram, Bristol Park, losing by a narrow single in the ninth.

No Longer the "Futile Phils"

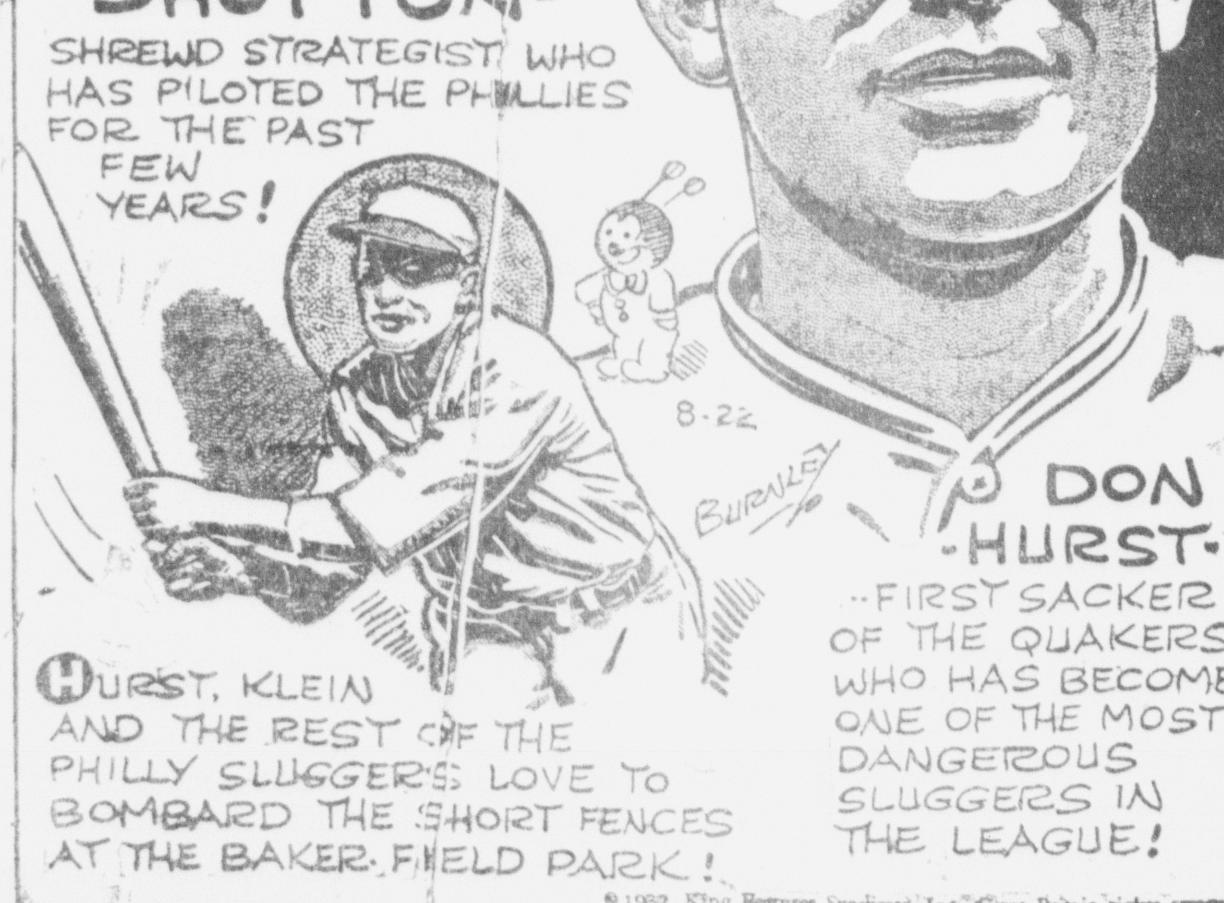

By HARDIN BURNLEY

BURT SHOTTON
SHREWD STRATEGIST WHO HAS PILOTTED THE PHILLIES FOR THE PAST FEW YEARS!

DON HURST
FIRST SACKER OF THE QUAKERS WHO HAS BECOME ONE OF THE MOST DANGEROUS SLUGGERS IN THE LEAGUE!

HURST, KLEIN AND THE REST OF THE PHILLY SLUGGERS LOVE TO BOMBARD THE SHORT FENCES AT THE BAKER FIELD PARK!

FOR years and years, the Phillies of Philadelphia (then known as the "Futile Phillies") have been convenient stepping stones for the other clubs in the National League. They might have been (and in fact were) likened to doormats, as they were always being stepped on; and it used to be a pretty certain bet that no matter how the other teams finished in the pennant race, the Futile Phillies would wind up in the old cellar position.

But all that is past now. THOSE days are over. Of course, in this crazy National League scramble there's no telling where the Phillies will finish—they might finish anywhere from first to last—but the fact remains that the Phils will no longer play carpets for anyone.

Nowadays, if you want to trample on the Phillies, you've got to knock 'em down; and throughout most of the present season that has been a pretty tough task for the other clubs.

Yessir, the Phillies have reformed, and there are a number of reasons for this.

First, there is Manager Burt Shotton, a quiet, tireless worker and a smart baseball man, who has done a great job of building a team in Philadelphia without a lot of what it takes to build a winning team.

Then, there is the batting power shown by the two big guns of the Phillies' attack—Hurst and Klein. These two are featuring a two-man attack as deadly as any in the game, taking rank with such historic slugging duos as Jackson and Felsch of the old White Sox, Crawford and Cobb of the Tigers, and the most famous of modern pairs, Ruth and Gehrig of the Yankees' Murderer's Row.

Hurst and Klein are a regular two-ringed batting circus, a couple of fence-busting willow wielders who cause every enemy moundsman to quake with apprehension. Both are up among the leaders in home run hitting, in runs scored, in runs batted in, in the number of hits and in the batting race.

Hurst, the Phils' first baseman, is having the greatest year of his career. Ever since Manager Shotton brought him to Baker Bowl from Syracuse, Don has batted well over the .300 mark, but this season he has been hitting much better than ever before.

Hurst began his career in the minors as a pitcher, but because of his natural batting skill he soon devoted his time to the outfield, where he attracted so much notice that he was given a trial with the Cardinals. This was back in 1925, and the Cards then sent him to Fort Smith. In 1926 he was shifted to Syracuse, where Shotton converted him into a first baseman. Joining the Phils in 1928, Hurst started off with a bang by knocking out a home run with the bases filled in the first game of the season. Now, four years later, he stands out as one of the most formidable batsmen in either league.
